Indians.

MCDOWELL'S MISTAKEN, SAYS HOYT.

National Associated Press to the Star.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 30.—In reply to Gen. McDowell's telegram to the effect that the Hualapai Indians in Arizona were starving, Commissioner of Indian Affairs Hoyt says that Gen. McDowell sent a similar telegram last summer, and that on the 24th of August the Indian Bureau of the Department of the Interior requested the War Department to furnish these Indians beef and flour for sixty days. These rations commenced to be issued on the 10th of October and the time will expire on the 10th of December. Within this week the Indian Office made another request of the War Department to again supply rations to these Indians which will be continued until February 10th, during which time Congress will be called upon to make appropriation to feed them. Hence Mr. Hoyt objects that the statement as to their starving condition is erroneous.

GOES DOWN IN A HOLE AND MAKES A SPEECH.

VIRGINIA CITY, Oct. 30.—Gen. Grant and party descended the "C" shaft, and visited the lower level of Bonanzas under the guidance of J. W. Mackay. He subsequently visited a number of mills, and was made an honorary member of the Pacific Coast Pioneers. The General made a speech, saying that nothing he met with abroad gave him such pleasure as the reception here. True, his greeting there was honest and hearty, but it showed merely the esteem felt for our country by foreign nations. It would have been quite different a century ago. Now we are regarded as the most powerful nation on the earth. We have much which European Nations have not; we have a population which as yet does not threaten to crowd any inhabited district, or exhaust the productivity of the soil; we have an extensive soil and numerous undeveloped resources to exhaust before our population becomes so dense as to make the raising of food sufficient to live on a serious problem. In this respect we have great promise for the future. The fact of the matter is, we are more thoughtful of abroad than we think of ourselves, yet at the same time we think considerable of ourselves, and we in fact are a little conceited over our advantage. The newspapers and politicians, however, think there are a good many bad people in the world, and that things are on the verge of ruin; but I guess we are all right. Still we can be improved. If I was not an American I would not dare talk this way for fear of being mobbed. I thank you all for this kindly expression of your esteem.

MURDER NO CRIME.

Wm. Frei, Who Killed Jauch, a Free Man.

The old adage that "whisky is only fourteen cents a gallon and murderers are never hung here," has again been verified.

The readers of the Star will remember the details of a blood-curdling murder that occurred on Sunday night, August 24th, at No. 60 Buckeye street, between Oak and Main streets.

The history of the crime, in brief, is this: William Frei, a young man of eighteen years, had a quarrel that night with his baker boss, Jacob Jauch, about some money which the latter had kept back to pay a whisky bill. Frei about 8 o'clock in the evening met Jauch in the cellar and hit him with the pommel of the hatchet, knocking him senseless.

Then Frei deliberately used the sharp end of the hatchet and inflicted nine wounds on Jauch's head, each one of which would have proved fatal. After hacking his victim up, Frei left and was arrested the next day by Officers Renner and Wynne, of Bremen-street Station.

A Stah reporter visited Frei in his cell, at the Central Station, about an hour after the murderer's arrest, when he gave the following statement:

"I owed $3 to a saloon-keeper named J. Erich, No. 65 Buckeye street. He wanted the money from me, and to get it went to my boss and complained to him of me, and also abused me. I told him that in the course of the next week I would pay my debt, as I had several others to settle up."

"Last evening I received my wages, but my boss held $2 back. I replied that this did not suit me—Jauch should pay his men and I would pay my own debts. I went to Erich and had words with him on account of his action, but Jauch, who was present, said that Erich was correct. This was about 7 o'clock last evening. At 8 o'clock I went into the saloon of Charles Hildebrandt, No. 67 Buckeye street, and drank a glass of beer."

"Then I proceeded to the bakery where I work and found my boss cleaning the bread pans, which he had never done before. I did not talk to him any more until about 11 o'clock, when the dough was being prepared. The talk about that debt of mine was then again resumed, and a war of words ensued."

"My boss suddenly grabbed a piece of wood and made a motion to strike me, but I was ahead of him and struck him with the pommel of the hatchet."

"I thought, in fact, have shot, as it would not hurt him so long; the revolver I had with me was a twenty-two caliber; I only hit him three times; after this I wanted at first to go to my bed-room, but as I was excited, I went to my sister's place, in the second story of No. 48 Elder street."

"I told her that I had a quarrel with my boss, but I told her nothing concerning the bloody tragedy."

"I tried to sleep, but could not, as I had to keep thinking about what I had done."

"Before I left my sister I went to Moerschel's place, on Findlay, near Race street."

"I pulled out my revolver there, and when a laborer, who was standing near, asked what I was going to do with it, I told him I wanted to use it in case of emergency."

"About 5 o'clock this morning four policemen made their appearance, and when they knocked at my door I knew what was up. I got dressed and delivered myself into their custody. When I left with them I bade my sister good-by."

The prisoner, who, as stated above, is only eighteen years old, took matters very coolly, talked about his crime the same as he would about the making of a loaf of bread, laughed at some of the questions asked him, and on the statements of our reporter being translated in German to him, replied that they were correct in every particular."

At this time he does not yet know that his employer and victim is dead. When he asked him "Suppose he should die?" Frei replied that he did not know what he would do, and then he laughed again.

The above statements were made to our reporter in German, as Frei could not talk in English.

The Coroner held an inquest on the following Tuesday when, after taking the testimony and on being questioned by Coroner Carrick whether he wanted to make a statement, he stoically and rather clannishly said he had nothing to say.

The Coroner rendered the following pertinent verdict: "I do find that deceased came to his death from fractures of the skull, the same being inflicted with a hatchet in the hands of William Frei. I also find that the murder was premeditated, deliberate, and marked with unusual atrocity."

The testimony taken before the Coroner was submitted to Prosecuting Attorney Drew, and the late Grand Jury, in spite of all this and the murderer's statements, found no bill of indictment against Frei.

Prosecutor Drew, being asked about the matter, said he could bring no testimony before the Grand Jury to convict the man. He must, therefore, discharge him as soon as Frei's counsel asked for it. This will probably be done this evening.

THE COUNTY CLERK.
Some Ugly Rumors Against L. G. Bernard.
The assertion has been made that County Clerk L. G. Bernard has not been attending to his official duties as he ought to. It is alleged that Mr. Bernard is behind in his accounts, and that there are grave fears that the treasury will not hold out.

This, it is said, is due to the heavy expenses incurred by Bernard in his last campaign. Another report is that Bernard has ordered all of his employees to turn over their last month's salary to him to square up his expenses.

All these charges are of course denied by Bernard, and the matter is now in the hands of the Fee Commissioner, Mr. Drew. An order was issued by the Court's me time ago in the case of Mary Riley against Enoch T. Carson. The case was tried in Judge Johnston's Court, and pending the decision the County Clerk held the amount in litigation, stated to be about $3,000. Mr. Riley says the money was a trust fund, and while he himself had confidence enough in Bernard, he deemed it his duty to see the money safe.

Thereupon the attorneys of both sides, Wulfin & Worthington for Carson, and Jordan, Jordan & Williams for Riley, agreed that the money would be safer in the hands of the Sheriff, and Judge Johnston issued an order accordingly. The order was handed to the Sheriff last evening, and was by him presented to Bernard. The latter promised to verify the account, and turn over the sum this morning.

Mr. Bernard, this morning, as soon as the entries in the Riley-Carson case were made on the appearance docket, verified the account and turned over the money.

Mr. Bernard puts the source of the charges made against him to some of the men whom he recently discharged.

DAIRING SAFE ROBBERY.

A Front-street Commission House Robbed at Noon To-day.

A daring robbery took place this afternoon, between 12 and 1 o'clock, at R. H. Robinson & Co.'s commission store, No. 93 West Front street.

At that hour Mr. Robinson had gone on 'Change and the book-keeper locked the inner door of the safe, putting the key in the drawer of a desk. The outer door of the safe was left unlocked. The book-keeper then locked the office door and went to dinner, leaving no one about the premises at all.

Shortly after the book-keeper had left, the porter of the store adjoining Robinson's was approached by two men while he was standing in front of the building. These two engaged him in conversation, while a third party went up stairs to Robinson's office. In a few minutes this man came down, and went west towards Race street, followed by the other two.

About 1 o'clock Mr. Robinson returned from the Chamber of Commerce and found that the office door was pryed open, likewise the drawer of the desk containing the safe key. On examining the safe he found that the sub-treasury (an iron box) had been taken out and carried off.

It contained something over $50 in money, a diamond ring valued at $50, and a gold pocket, besides insurance policies, deeds, mortgages, notes, and other papers of no value to anybody but the firm.

The police were notified and are making every effort to capture the daring gang.

The following gentlemen were appointed a Committee on 'Change to-day, to act in connection with a committee appointed by the Board of Trade, to arrange for a reception to Southern merchants on the occasion of the opening of the Cincinnati Southern Road to Chattanooga: S. C. Weir, W. W. Taylor, Mathew Andy, James M. Glenn and Wm. H. Davis.

The members of the First Presbyterian Church of Madisonville, Ohio, have elected the following Trustees for the ensuing year: S. W. Stone, S. F. Covington and M. Bodine.
